sài wēng shī mǎ yān zhī fēi fú
塞翁失马，焉知非福

This idiom means “a blessing in disguise” and comes from the following story:

Near China's northern borders lived a man called Sai Weng who was well versed in the practices of Taoism. One day, for no reason, his horse ran away. Everyone commiserated with him.

"Perhaps this will soon turn out to be a blessing," said Sai Weng.

After a few months, his horse returned, leading another fine horse with it. Everyone congratulated him.

"Perhaps this will soon turn out to be a cause of misfortune," said Sai Weng.

sài wēng shī mǎ yān zhī fēi fú
塞翁失马，焉知非福

Since Sai Weng was well-off and had many good horses, his son became fond of riding. However, one day he broke his thigh bone falling from a horse and was crippled. Everyone commiserated with him.

"Perhaps this will soon turn out to be a blessing," said Sai Weng.

One year later, the northern tribes started a big invasion of the border regions. All able-bodied, young men took up arms and fought against the invaders, and as a result, around the border, nine out of every ten men died. However, Sai Weng's son did not join in the fighting because he was crippled and so both the boy and his father survived.
